have never been excelled, in the intensity of interest which they create, by any writer.

This work is of a character similar to the "Court of London," by the same author. It takes however, a wider range among the aristocracy of London, and exhibit their duily life on a more extensive reade. The peculiarities of that life, as they are depicted by Reycold with all the power of his penils, are such as to startle the reader while they fascinate his attention.
